DEALERS IN COMMON HONESTY
SURETY BOND COMPANIES HAVE FAITH IN MEN.

Millions Risked on the Theory That 999 Men Out of 1,000 Will Not Steal—But These Who Do Are Relentlessly Punished—Others Likely to Be Honest.

If the militant money makers would kindly turn their attention to a certain line of business which seems to have escaped their notice they would discover something which would make them, at least us, feel very much happier.

A business which not only believes in the honesty of the average man, but actually banks on it, deals in it, finds it a veritable gold mine, is a cheerful object of contemplation in these perilous times. Such a business is that of the surety bond companies.

A representative of Moody's Magazine asked the president of one of these companies if the millions invested in it were not "risked on the assurance that the men are honest." To which question came the following answer, the same being recommended to the notice of the "muck rakers":

"Do not say that. The surety capital is not risked. Change the word 'assumption' to the word 'knowledge.' We know that most men are honest. We have proved that fact. We are surety bond merchants. We have honesty, and we sell it—at a profit."

"We lend any man who handles money, guaranteeing the authors of the money against one through the possible dishonesty of his hands." We charge from one-quarter of 1 per cent. to one-half of 1 per cent. of the amount of the bond. Think of the gold gained by no gambler in his senses would take such odds.

"And we are not gamblers, but business men, operating at a profit. We absolutely know that we are on the safe side; we know that 999 men out of 1,000 are honest. Of course, not all the surety bond companies succeed; not all can make profits. This, however, is because they are not properly managed. The business itself is built on bedrock—unalterable human honesty."

And yet, as the headlines of the newspapers show, dishonesty is rampant or seems to be so. Every day men run away with or divert to their own use the money of others. But once in a while a country gold miner is because of men and women in places of trust who do not steal. The honest, stable folk surely no seasonal stories.

It is that one defaulter out of a thousand honest money handlers of whom we hear. The bondman, or the bond company, pays the penalty for guaranteeing the one out of a thousand defaulter. Then the surety bond company pays out some more money on his account—getting him into jail. Meanwhile it derives a profit and a dividend from the rock ribbed honesty of the 999.

Broadly speaking, married men are better risks than single men. They are more settled and have a greater sense of responsibility. On the other hand there are sometimes disadvantages; as, for instance, too many children or an extravagant wife or an expensive invalid in the household.
